(54) METHOD FOR MAKING HEAT-EFFICIENT CONSTRUCTION COMPONENT

(57) A concrete mixture is mixed with the simultaneous usage of all materials in the mixture to form each of functional layers for manufacturing multilayer heat-efficient building component. Large heavy aggregate is used to form one of load-bearing outer layers, and light aggregate is used to form the internal heat-insulating layer. Then, the mixture is poured into a form placed on a vibrotable, during the vibration whereof the foliation of the concrete mixture is carried out. Immediately after the foliation, in the process of vibrating, trampling downwards of formed by lightweight concrete layer is carried out by means of mesh shifted by puncheon until its coupling with heavy concrete lower layer. In the process of trampling downwards the upper heat-insulating layer, the matrix is moved upwards through the intergranular space and the mesh cells forming fine-grained concrete second bearing layer.

(54) COMPLETE DISTRIBUTION DEVICE
FOR EXTERNAL INSTALLATION AND METHOD FOR PRODUCTION
THEREOF

(57) Present invention relates to electrotechnology, in particular, to the production, conversion and distribution of electric energy, and may find usage in complete switchgear (CSWGR). The invention solves the problem of creating CSWGR outdoor installation of switchgear, and a method to manufacture thereof is characterized with minimized costs associated with transporting the device to the place of installation thereof, and subsequent assembly, minimizing operational inconvenience, as well. The CSWGR contains prefabricated modules that are rigidly interconnected and forms housing containing cells with basic electrical equipment, auxiliary equipment, lighting, heating, ventilation systems, input device, and service corridors. To solve the task, the block modules containing cells with main equipment are placed in central part of device, rigidly interconnected, installed symmetrically relative to vertical axis of symmetry of device, perpendicular to this axis; at that, service corridors are located in block modules installed on both sides of central part of device, with long side of each block modules installed parallel to the base of device; at the same time, block modules containing auxiliary equipment and service corridors are provided with threaded connection componentry installed along long side of block module and ensuring the connection of two block modules during transportation. The method involves the manufacture of block modules with the main and auxiliary equipments and service corridors, their transportation to installation site and their subsequent sequential assembly at installation site. To solve the problem before transportation, block modules with auxiliary equipment and service corridors are connected in pairs together by means of threaded connections, and are separated from each other at the installation site; at that, assembly sequence of block modules is chosen as follows: first, the block modules containing main equipment and forming the central part of device are installed, then block modules containing auxiliary equipment and service corridors are attached thereto.

EXTERNAL INSTALLATION

(57) Present invention relates to the production, conversion and distribution of electric energy and can be used in complete switchgear (CSWGR). The technical result is the creation of CSWGR outdoor installation, characterized with easy access to any equipment (without disassembling other equipment), increased operational reliability due to the placement of bushing insulators and other equipment in removable case, and inaccessibility of precipitation, minimizing accidents due to the presence of a partition separating current transformers from other equipment. Achieved by the fact that CSWGR contains a container, wherein the cells with basic electric equipment, auxiliary equipment, lighting systems, heating, ventilation, busbars are located, connecting bushing insulators with componentry of device, busbar compartment, attachment compartment, bus bushings placed in upper part of device and brought out. Cells with basic electric equipment contain current transformers, grounding, and switches located in the compartments. Bushing insulators to connect to the overhead line are located in upper part of device, bus bushings are placed in removable case mounted on side surface of container and having service hatch, and the busbar connecting bushing insulators with current transformers is placed in the container opening with bushing insulators placed therein. At that, current transformers are fixed in upper part of cells, between busbar compartment and the bay of connection there is a partition wall, on which the earthing switch is installed. Service hatches are executed on the inner vertical walls of bay and busbars. A hatch for connection to cable line is executed in lower part of removable body.
